TURKEY PROVOKED BY GREECE .- In itself the contest of Greeks and Turks on the newly marked frontier of Thessaly is a matter of the very smallest consequence. From time immemorial these wild mountain gorges-crowned in places by some solitary monastery, affording a scanty pasture in others to a hardy race of sheep—have been the scene of border forays and raids of brigands. When the frontier was being defined one of the Commissioners said to a Turkish witness, "We hear that cases of brigandage have just occurred in these regions." "Very likely." said the Turk, unmoved. "They have been occurring in these regions for about three thousand years." But just at present there is a significance in the fray as showing the bitterness of the national feud and as suggesting which side would be taken by Greece if Turkey should be embroiled with Great Britain. Tricoupis, the Greek Premier, is at heart an Englishman; King George is the brother of the Princess of Wales, and in the event of an Anglo-Turkish war Greece might be chosen for the battle ground,-N.
